

Name:	Anna, 42
Location:	USA
Profile:	Professional, with known anxiety disorder trying to biohack her life and align more with her menstrual cycle
Calendar use:	Use Google Calendar + Todo List (Todoist) + Pomodoro Timer
Notes:	- Want to have daily insights on exercise and food (what to eat) - Todo list must be accessible from laptop - Clean simple design, liked colours and logo - Ready to check in symptoms every day (loved our set of symptoms), expect to see analytics and predictions based in her input - Found app in the App Store (was looking for an app not only to track pregnancy but to better understand her feelings and sensations on each day of the cycle)
Todo List Prototypes:	Prototype 1: didn't realise that calendar is pullable, managed to add tasks, had a very positive feedback on "tasks for today" feature Prototype 2: confused with wording (clicked on plus for events but then saw new task)
Name:	Maya, mid 30s
Location:	Spain
Profile:	Professional, tracking her cycle many years with Flo (after unplanned pregnancy 7 years ago)
Calendar use:	Use Apple Calendar + Todo List (Notes, Telegram)
Notes:	- Does not like the idea of moving tasks to another phase, her tasks are not movable - Use tracker only to track menstruation and pms (track every month)
Todo List Prototypes:	Prototype 1: was very confused about how top part is related to the bottom, thought maybe she could pull tasks from the top to the bottom. found illustration on the top part clickable. didn't realise that calendar is pullable, managed to add tasks, had positive feedback on "tasks for today" feature Prototype 2: suggested to name Events -- Calendar (again confusing wording)
Name:	Irina, mid 30s
Location:	Russia
Profile:	Professional, works from the office, tracking her periods with another app and Essence. Wants to know more about her cycle and to be prepared to how she is going to feel.
Calendar use:	First Choice - Paper notebook. Uses daily. If not available - notes on iPhone. Work meetings in Outlook Calendar.
Notes:	- complaining about the pain to the app - logging periods regularly - you can not re-schedule your life, but it's nice to get insights on how to cope with the life we have
Todo List Prototypes:	Prototype 1: Got an Impression that she can move tasks from the top to the bottom, was generally confused Prototype 2: more clear, managed to create tasks
Name:	Basak
Location:	Paris
Profile:	Molecular Masters in DataScience, Living with Cycle
Calendar use:
Likes:	Very pretty background, sync with the calendar (sync is not actually sync)
Dislikes:	Text in two lines (will do)
Notes:	A big fan of Flo. With more personalization. Near ovulation (a lot of productivity,) (I Mazer Hill, cocha) More different Practices. Short Practices. Meditation according. Type of workouts. myFlo selling supplements (but don't like that those are not personalised.) Track needs and desires (personal stuff). That feels hard and why. Work better, left alone. Perfect days to hang out with friends. Day 25 -- is a horrible day. ☹️